Images of health

In the April issue of World Health, we announced the six winners of the WHO Photo-Ambassador Prize, who (by courtesy of Swissair) were invited to visit the Geneva headquarters of WHO on World Health Day, 7 April. But a number of other prizes were awarded by the jury to photographers among the 1,725 who submitted entries. We reproduce here some of the winning entries and some which received “honourable mention.”

Peter Hendricks (Federal Republic of Germany), Walter Imber (Switzerland), Romualdas Pozerskis (USSR), Tino Soriano (Spain) and Liba Taylor (United Kingdom) received a Special Prize offered by Canon-Europe.

The Polaroid Special Prize went to Ed Hooper (United Kingdom), Carlos Rene Perez (United States), Guilherme Silva (Portugal), Anthony Suau (Black Star, USA) and Ghulam Rasul Zafar (Belgium).

Special Prizes offered by Pentacon were awarded to Mark Edwards (UK), Sigas Ojeda (Cuba), Pang Hway Sheng (Indonesia) and Marc Vanappelghem (Switzerland).

Mr D. Condowe, a student from Malawi, who entered the competition with his pencil-drawings representing themes which he would have photographed if he had had a camera, was also awarded a Pentacon camera.

The Broncolour Special Prize was awarded to Jørgen Schytte (Denmark).

In addition to these special prizes, medals of the International Federation of Photographic Art (FIAP) were given to Philippe Bazin (France), Rosebell Schurz (USA), Guilherme Silva, Walter Imber, Sunao Masuda (Japan) and Liba Taylor. And 42 other participants were awarded an “Honourable Mention.” All the winners received a diploma and medal from WHO.

The total of 105 winning photos (36 in colour, 69 in black-and-white) are being exhibited simultaneously in Alexandria, Brazzaville, Copenhagen, Geneva, Manila, New Delhi and Washington before going on a world tour.

The international jury which judged all the 11,500 entries in Geneva comprised: Mohamed Amin (Kenya), Ralph Crane (USA), Maurice Donikens, FIAP (Belgium), Tibor Farkas, WHO, Geneva (Switzerland), John Isaak, UN, New York (India), Monique Jacot (Switzerland) and Peter Korniss (Hungary).
